

This is a democracy - the airwaves belong to the public. A station's license renewal is predicated on how well it's serving the community.

Is a hit piece on a presidential candidate, aired days before the election, "serving the community"?

The integrity of the FCC is at stake here: will you allow Sinclair Broadcasting Group to dictate political propaganda to its public? Or will you fulfill your obligation to the American people, and demand that Sinclair abide by its mandate, or lose its license?

More is at stake than just this corporation, this instance.

We're waiting to hear your decision.

Sincerely,

Jane Kimbrough
